Invisible...

Last Thursday was Thanksgiving. Thousands of people gathered at Dallas city hall run in the 40th annual Turkey Trot. There were live bands and DJ's. There were people handing out water, bananas and yogurt to the participants. There were people just watching the activities. I was there handing out tracts and sharing the Gospel. I talked to a number of the race participants. I talked to several groups of teenagers striking up conversations with them using the "Ten Most Popular Things" quiz/tract. Across the street is the public library. In front of the library were about 10 homeless people. I handed tracts to them, then struck up a conversation with a man named Rob. When I asked him if he would go to heaven his friend Vito got offended and then involved in the conversation. I talked to Vito for the next hour. We sat on a bench and talked about history, politics, restaurants, the Gospel, heaven and hell. By the end of our conversation he was giving serious consideration to starting a relationship with Jesus!! As we were talking I noticed hundreds of people walked by and did not even seem to see these people there. It was sad; as if they were invisible. As the festivities were winding down at city hall, the kids handing out bags of bananas offered me two bags. I took them and went back to the library and handed them out to the homeless and to others I passed on my way back to my car. I meet Keaton and Bryce and handed them

Gospels of John. Keaton mentioned that he liked Luke. So I gave him complete Bible. He was so grateful saying it was the first Bible he had had in over 30 years! I also met three men from North Dallas Baptist church. The homeless were not invisible to them. They were there to distribute Thanksgiving diners!
